An Awful Time With an Oyster.

Last night a fat man wearing a turn down collar three sizes too large for him, sat down to a table in a Clark street restaurant and called for a plate of raw oysters. He got them cold and juicy right off the ice, and harpooning a fat one with his fork, he lifted it towards his mouth. But the slippery, simy, chilly bivalve dropped off the fork be-fore reaching its destination, carromed on the fat man's chin and then slid down inside of his shirt and nestled on his breast.

No one saw the incident. The obese gen himself didn't see it, but he felt that something had happened and that he had arrived at a crisis in his life. A startled expression rested for a moment on his face; then with a low, plaintiff wall of heart-breaking agony he half rose from the chair and clapped his hand on his stomach. He struck the oyster, but that coy creature was one of the most alert and agile of its species. It at once changed its base on feeling the pressure and shied upward and across the fat man's wide expanse of palpitating bosom, leaving a trail of arctic frigidity in its wake and took up new quarters in his left armpit.

With a wild bowl of anguish the unhappy proprietor of the oyster leaped two feet in he air, uttered another yell like a wild west Indian, and commenced to work his arm after the manner of a bagpipe musician. The oyster got excited and started again on is travels, but was apparently unable to se-ect a permanent location. After making several bind rushes it halted for a moment

The unfortunate fat man was now in a stell a mind bordering on insanity. He exect over his chair, yelled and swore, b) d himself in front and behind and on the sides, rolled up his eyes, frothed at he mouth and spun around like a top. But ettled and scooted here and there like a treak of greased lightning, taking great pains not to travel over the same ground "He's got a fit!" screamed a wild eyed man, making a rush for the door, with a napkin tucked under his chin.

"It's either that or he's afire inside of his lothes," said ano her pale-faced diner, dging away from the sufferer.

"For mercy's sake take him off, some-mody, I'm dying!" wailed the stricken man, s he threw up both hands and sat down eavily on the floor.

When the victim of misplaced refreshnents struck the floor the oyster that out of the back of his neck like a bullet, hit the colling with a squoshy plunk and then fell a nung nunp and meiess ire chandelier.

HOME-MADE COMPASS .- Get from a drug eist a common pasteboard pill box of about one and three-fourths inches in diameter Out in the lid a round hole an inch in diameter. Cover the hole on the inside with a piece of window glass, which can be held in place by bits of sealing wax at the corners. Break off about three-eighths of an inch from the point of a sawing needle and affix it point upwards by means of sealing wax to the centre of the bottom of the box. This is to be the pivot upon which the magnetic needle is to swing. For a needle use the permanent magnet made of a darning needle. To adjust this to the pivot saw out a piece of ivory or bone-the handle of an old tooth brush is good material—a quarter of an inch square by a tenth of an inch thick. Coal, Salt and Plaster, In the centre of the square side bore a hole by means of a knife blade or the handle end of a file nearly through the piece. The inner extremity of the hole must be smooth with no small crevices or sharp edges. To the opposite surface attach by sealing wax the needle, and after placing it upon the pivot put the cover on the box. If the bole in the ivory be well made one end of the needle will point to the n rth. Place the
